Rabinowitz, Alan <b. 1953>
ISBN 1-559-63799-4

Note: This book is about exploration, danger, and discovery in a remote area of the planet where the greatest necessity is salt, where people plow the earth using themselves as the beasts of burden, and where the main source of meat is a group of primitive species that are little known outside the region. In 1993 Alan Rabinowitz, called "the Indiana Jones" of wildlife science by the New York Times, first set foot in Myanmar, the country known until 1989 as Burma, hoping to survey the country's wildlife and convince the government to establish protected natural areas. In the event-filled years that followed, as the Myanmar government allowed Rabinowitz and his Wildlife Conservation Society team to travel to increasingly remote areas, he succeeded beyond all expectations, not only discovering species new to science but also playing a vital role in wildlife preservation, including the creation of Hkakabo Razi National Park, now one of Southeast Asia's largest protected areas.

Note:
A dozen of documentary films, shot in burma (myan-mar) since 1984, is the basis of the thesis about customs and beliefs in a closed country – ambassador for france the author could film, under good escort, whatever would not raise any suspicion: religi- nature and architecture, monastic life, aigimages and cottage industry and the genuine nat culture. this cult is described in detail and forms the subject of a 80 minutes film displaying several rituals as well as the main annual nat festivals. some films have been shot in one or few days (golden leaves-danse-bêtes) others in years (esprit es-tu la? – a people in west for merits) some- times many years (twelue for "birth of a pagoda")
